Reading and Use of English

1 hour 30 minutes · 56 questions

Part 1 · Multiple-choice cloze

For questions 1–8, read the text below and decide which answer (A, B, C or D) best fits each gap.

The return of the afternoon nap

For much of the twentieth century, the afternoon nap was (1) …… as a sign of laziness, something that belonged to small children and the very old. Anyone caught dozing at their desk could expect, at the very (2) ……, a raised eyebrow. In recent years, however, the nap has undergone a remarkable change of fortune. Sleep researchers now (3) …… to the view that a short rest in the early afternoon can sharpen concentration, lift the mood and even (4) …… a part in lowering blood pressure. Some companies have gone so (5) …… as to install sleeping pods in their offices, although it remains to be seen whether employees actually dare to use them.

The key, it seems, lies in timing. A nap of twenty minutes or so leaves most people feeling refreshed, (6) …… one of an hour or more can bring on a heavy, confused feeling that takes a long time to (7) …… off. Experts also warn against napping late in the day, since this almost invariably (8) …… with sleep at night. The ideal nap, in short, is brief, early and, ideally, taken somewhere other than one's desk.

1 A rejected B dismissed C denied D refused

2 A least B less C lowest D minimum

3 A hold B subscribe C agree D approve

4 A take B make C play D do

5 A much B long C far D deep

6 A unless B whereas C despite D otherwise

7 A pass B go C die D wear

8 A disturbs B prevents C interferes D damages

Part 2 · Open cloze

For questions 9–16, read the text below and think of the word which best fits each gap. Use only one word in each gap.

Why we forget names

Most of us have, at (9) …… time or another, been introduced to someone and forgotten their name within seconds. (10) …… embarrassing as this is, it is not a sign of a failing memory. Names are simply hard to remember, and the reason has (11) …… to do with how the brain stores information. A face, a job or an accent all carry meaning that can be linked to things we already know. A name, (12) …… the other hand, is arbitrary: there is nothing about a person called Sarah that makes her any more Sarah-like than Emma.

(13) …… is more, we are usually distracted at the moment of introduction, busy thinking about what to say (14) …… than listening. Memory experts suggest repeating the name aloud straight away and using it in conversation. It may feel forced, but it gives the brain a second chance to make a connection it would (15) …… have missed. Failing that, there is always the time-honoured strategy of asking a friend to find (16) …… for you.

Part 3 · Word formation

For questions 17–24, read the text below. Use the word given in capitals at the end of some of the lines to form a word that fits in the gap in the same line.

Second-hand and proud of it

Not so long ago, buying second-hand clothes was something people did out of (17) …… NECESSARY rather than choice, and few would have admitted to it. Today the situation is almost (18) …… RECOGNISE. Markets and online platforms selling used clothing have become hugely (19) …… FASHION, especially among the young, who see a vintage jacket as a mark of (20) …… INDIVIDUAL rather than of poverty.

Part of the appeal is (21) …… DOUBT financial, but there is more to it than price. Many shoppers are (22) …… INCREASE uneasy about the environmental cost of clothes that are worn a handful of times and thrown away. Buying second-hand feels like a small act of (23) …… RESIST against that cycle. There is also the thrill of the hunt: the (24) …… LIKELY discovery of a perfect coat at the bottom of a pile is a pleasure that no ordinary shop can offer. Retailers have noticed, and several large chains now run second-hand sections of their own, which rather suggests that the trend is here to stay.

Part 4 · Key word transformations

For questions 25–30, complete the second sentence so that it has a similar meaning to the first sentence, using the word given. Do not change the word given. You must use between three and six words, including the word given.

25 As soon as we arrived, it started to rain.
HARDLY
Hardly _____ it started to rain.

26 Please remember that the museum is closed on Mondays.
ACCOUNT
Please take _____ the museum is closed on Mondays.

27 I would prefer to stay in tonight instead of going out.
RATHER
I _____ out tonight.

28 People say that the old castle is haunted.
SUPPOSED
The old castle _____ haunted.

29 Although he trained very hard, he was not picked for the team.
DESPITE
He was not picked for the team _____ he trained.

30 I do not care if it rains: we are going to the beach.
WHETHER
We are going to the beach _____ not.

Part 5 · Multiple choice

You are going to read an extract from a novel in which a woman inherits her grandfather's clock-repair workshop. For questions 31–36, choose the answer (A, B, C or D) which you think fits best according to the text.

The workshop

My grandfather repaired clocks for fifty-one years in a room at the back of the house, and in all that time I never once saw him bring a clock into the kitchen. The workshop had its own door, its own kettle, its own radio tuned permanently to a station nobody else listened to. When he came through to eat he washed his hands with a particular soap and the smell of oil came with him anyway, but he never talked about what he had been doing. It was not that he was hiding anything. The work simply belonged to another room, and he seemed to think that was where it should stay.

The letters were in the second drawer of the bench, under the catalogues. There were perhaps two hundred of them, going back to the nineteen-seventies, and almost all of them were from customers. Some were short: a date, a thank-you, a cheque that was no longer attached. Others ran to several pages. A woman in Aberdeen had written to him every Christmas for thirty years about a carriage clock that had belonged to her mother. A man he had apparently never met described, in a tiny slanting hand, the sound his grandfather clock made at three in the morning and asked whether it was possible that a clock could be lonely. My grandfather had kept them all, and had answered them all, and I had known nothing about any of it. I sat on the floor with the drawer in my lap and read until the light went.

There is a great deal to do when somebody dies, and I was grateful for it. The forms, the phone calls, the bank that needed a certificate and then needed it again in a different format: all of it was dull and necessary and left no room for anything else. People talk about the machinery of grief as though it were a cruelty, but I found it kind. For three weeks I was simply a person with a list, and every evening the list was a little shorter.

Then the list ran out, and on the first morning with nothing on it a man knocked at the workshop door. He was holding a clock wrapped in a tea towel. My grandfather, he said, had promised to look at it in the spring. I explained, and he was sorry, and then he stood there, and I understood that he was waiting for me to take the clock. I knew nothing. I could not have told you which end of a screwdriver to hold. But I had read two hundred letters by then, and I found that I could not say no to the tea towel. I took it, and wrote his name in the book, and felt my face go hot as I did so, because I had just made a promise I had no way of keeping.

The clock is on the bench now. I have opened the back, which took me most of an afternoon, and I have looked inside, and I have closed it again. I have also, I should say, had a letter from an auction house offering to clear the workshop, and I have not answered it. I am aware that I cannot go on like this indefinitely, that at some point I will have to be either a person who mends clocks or a person who does not. What I have decided, for the moment, is not to decide. The radio is still on the station nobody listens to. I have not changed it, and I notice that I have started washing my hands with the particular soap.

31 In the first paragraph, the narrator suggests that her grandfather

A was secretive about his work.
B resented the time his work demanded.
C saw his work as something separate from the rest of life.
D expected her to take over the workshop one day.

32 What does the narrator say about the letters?

A They revealed a side of her grandfather she had not known.
B They showed that he had been unhappy in his work.
C They were mostly concerned with payment.
D They had been written for her to find.

33 What does the narrator mean by “the machinery of grief” in the third paragraph?

A the practical tasks that follow a death
B the way sadness returns when least expected
C the pressure to behave in a particular way
D the support offered by other people

34 How did the narrator feel when she took the man's clock?

A annoyed that he had interrupted her
B ashamed of having made a promise she could not keep
C surprised that her grandfather still had customers
D relieved to have something to do at last

35 What is implied about the narrator's situation at the end of the extract?

A She has decided to sell the workshop.
B She is deliberately putting off a decision.
C She has committed herself to learning the trade.
D She intends to keep the workshop open only for a short time.

36 Which of the following best describes the narrator's attitude to her grandfather in the extract as a whole?

A affectionate but puzzled by him
B resentful of his absence from her life
C admiring above all of his technical skill
D guilty about having neglected him

Part 6 · Cross-text multiple matching

You are going to read four extracts from articles in which writers give their views on working from home. For questions 37–40, choose from the writers A–D. The writers may be chosen more than once.

Working from home

A The evidence on productivity is, by now, hard to argue with: people who are spared the daily commute and the interruptions of an open-plan office simply get more done. What troubles me is what happens to the places we have left behind. City centres were built around the office worker, and the sandwich bars, dry cleaners and small theatres that depended on that daily tide are closing one by one. Managers who still insist on seeing staff at their desks are fighting a battle they have already lost; trust, not surveillance, is what keeps a dispersed team honest. But we should be clear-eyed about the cost to individuals. A screen is a poor substitute for the casual conversation at the kettle, and for many younger employees the silence of a shared flat is doing real harm.

B Nobody who has tried it seriously doubts that remote work makes most knowledge workers more efficient; the figures from company after company point the same way. The predictions of empty, dying cities, however, strike me as hysterical. Cities have survived plagues, wars and the arrival of the motor car, and they will reinvent themselves around people who come in three days a week rather than five. The managers who grumble about not being able to see their teams are, frankly, revealing more about themselves than about their staff: a manager who needs to watch people work has never learned to manage. As for loneliness, I suspect the problem is overstated. People are perfectly capable of finding company outside the office, and many report that their friendships have deepened now that they are no longer exhausted by the commute.

C I remain unconvinced by the productivity argument. What the surveys measure is hours logged and emails answered, and remote staff do plenty of both; whether they produce better ideas is another matter, and my own experience suggests that they do not. Meanwhile the damage to our towns is plain for anyone who walks through a business district at lunchtime. The scepticism of managers, which it is fashionable to mock, seems to me entirely reasonable: they are being asked to vouch for the work of people they rarely see, and the tools for doing so are still crude. The one claim I would resist is that home working is making us lonelier. Offices were never the warm communities that nostalgia now paints them, and most people I know are glad to be rid of the forced sociability.

D The productivity gains are real and, for some roles, dramatic; I have watched a sluggish department become genuinely effective once it stopped commuting. I am less persuaded by the laments for the city centre. Districts that were deserted after six in the evening were hardly thriving, and the conversion of offices into housing and studios may leave us with better places than before. Where I do have sympathy is with the managers. It is easy to accuse them of distrust, but they carry responsibility for results they can no longer observe being produced, and the caution many of them show is a rational response to that. The real worry, to my mind, is isolation. The informal mentoring that happened across desks has quietly vanished, and the people who are suffering most are the new recruits, who have never met the colleagues they message every day.

Choose from: A Writer A · B Writer B · C Writer C · D Writer D.

37 Which writer has a different opinion from the others about whether working from home makes people more productive? ☐

38 Which writer shares Writer A's view on the effect of home working on city centres? ☐

39 Which writer shares Writer C's opinion of managers who are reluctant to trust remote staff? ☐

40 Which writer takes a similar view to Writer D on the risk of isolation? ☐

Part 7 · Gapped text

You are going to read an article about a woman who restored an abandoned lighthouse. Six paragraphs have been removed from the article. Choose from the paragraphs A–G the one which fits each gap (41–46). There is one extra paragraph which you do not need to use.

The woman who brought back the light

When Marguerite Lind bought the lighthouse at Skerry Point, the estate agent's particulars ran to a single page and ended with the phrase "in need of some attention". The roof had gone. The spiral staircase stopped two floors short of the lamp room, and the lamp room itself was occupied by a colony of gulls that had been in residence for longer than most of the villagers across the bay.

41

The first year was spent simply making the tower safe. Scaffolding had to be brought across on a barge, and for weeks at a time the weather made it impossible to work at all. Lind lived in a caravan at the foot of the rock and learned, from videos and from the retired builders who began drifting over from the village to see what she was doing, how to mix lime mortar and lay a slate.

42

The lamp itself presented a different kind of problem. The original lens had been removed when the lighthouse was decommissioned in the nineteen-eighties and sold, nobody knew to whom. Lind spent the better part of a year writing to museums, auction houses and collectors, and received a great many polite replies and no useful information.

43

Reinstalling it took a further six months, and required the kind of precision that Lind had thought she had left behind with her career. Each of the glass prisms had to be cleaned, checked and set back into its brass frame by hand, and a single one out of place would have thrown the whole beam off course.

44

The light was switched on again on a wet evening in October, five years almost to the day after she had signed the contract. It has no official function; ships navigate by satellite now, and the local coastguard was polite but firm about not wanting it on their charts.

45

Lind now opens the lighthouse to visitors two days a week and has turned the keeper's cottage into a small museum of the village's maritime history, run entirely by volunteers, most of whom she first met when they turned up at her caravan with a bag of tools.

46

MISSING PARAGRAPHS (THERE IS ONE EXTRA PARAGRAPH WHICH YOU DO NOT NEED TO USE)

A Asked what she would say to anyone tempted to do the same, she is cautious. "Don't do it for the view," she says. "Do it because you can't bear not to. And make sure you do it somewhere with neighbours."

B The work also forced her to confront the small matter of the height. The lamp room is thirty metres above the rock, reached by a staircase she herself had rebuilt, and for the first few months she climbed it with her eyes fixed on the step in front of her. "Then one day I looked up," she says, "and I haven't really looked down since."

C It eventually turned up in a garden in the south of the country, where it had served for three decades as an unusually expensive ornament. The owner, once he understood what Lind was doing, refused to take any money for it. The lens arrived on a lorry wrapped in blankets, and the whole village came down to the harbour to watch it being lifted ashore.

D The second lighthouse, on the far side of the bay, had fared even worse. It was demolished in the nineties after a winter storm took most of the tower, and today only the base remains, a ring of stone that the children of the village use as a swimming platform in summer.

E She was not, by her own account, an obvious candidate for the job. A retired accountant with no experience of building work and a well-documented fear of heights, she had seen the sale advertised while on holiday and put in an offer before she had told her family. "I think I assumed somebody sensible would outbid me," she says. "Nobody did."

F That did not seem to matter to anyone present. Fishermen who had spent their lives at sea stood on the quay and watched the beam sweep across the water, and several of them were seen to wipe their eyes. "It isn't for the ships," one of them told a local reporter. "It's for us. It means the place is still here."

G Those visits soon became something more. The builders brought tools, then friends, then grandchildren, and by the end of the second summer there was a rota pinned to the caravan door. Lind insists she never asked for help. "They just kept turning up," she says. "I think they had been watching that light fall down for forty years and it had bothered them more than they let on."

Part 8 · Multiple matching

You are going to read an article in which four people describe moving to a different town or city. For questions 47–56, choose from the people (A–D). The people may be chosen more than once.

Starting again somewhere else

A Lena

I didn’t choose the town; my partner’s job did, and I arrived resentful and determined to hate it. For the first winter I succeeded. It was dark by four, I knew nobody, and the one thing I had been promised, a shorter commute, turned out to mean a twenty-minute walk through horizontal rain. What turned it round was, of all things, a choir. I joined because a colleague simply would not stop asking, and within a month I had more friends than I had made in ten years in the capital. People here have time, and they spend it on each other. I still miss the anonymity of a big city, the pleasure of being nobody in a crowd, and I suspect I always will. But when we were offered the chance to move back last year, I was the one who said no, which surprised my partner a good deal more than it surprised me.

B Rashid

My reasons were entirely practical. I work from home, my rent in the city had doubled in five years, and a flat twice the size was available for half the price three hours up the motorway. I did the sums and moved within a month. What I had not done was think about anything other than money. I underestimated how much of my social life had simply been proximity: friends I saw because they lived two streets away, and who, it turned out, were not going to make a six-hour round trip for a coffee. The first year was genuinely lonely. I am better now, mainly because I forced myself to say yes to everything, including a five-a-side football team I am far too old for. My advice to anyone doing this is to budget for the train fares back to see people. The flat is lovely. It is not, on its own, a life.

C Carmen

I moved abroad for a two-year contract and have now been here for eleven years, which tells you most of what you need to know. The hardest part was not the language, although that was hard enough; it was the small humiliations of being incompetent at things I had done without thinking since childhood. I could not read a parking sign. I did not know which queue to join at the post office. For a professional woman in her thirties, being treated as slightly stupid every day was exhausting in a way I had not anticipated. What kept me here was the work, which was better than anything I had been offered at home, and then, gradually, the city itself. I know its shortcuts now. I correct the pronunciation of newcomers. I go home twice a year and feel, each time, a little more like a visitor there and a little less like one here.

D Gareth

We moved to the coast when I retired because we had always said we would, and I would caution anyone against moving somewhere purely because of a promise made thirty years earlier. The town we had loved on holiday turned out, in February, to be a different place: shuttered, windy and with a bus every two hours. My wife took to it immediately. I did not. I had gone from being somebody at work, with a diary and a door with my name on it, to being a man who walked a dog along a beach, and nobody had warned me how much I would mind. It took a volunteer post at the lifeboat station to put that right. I am useful again, and I know the people on the quay by name. I would not move back; my wife would never forgive me. But I wish I had understood, before we came, that I was not just changing my address.

Choose from: A Lena · B Rashid · C Carmen · D Gareth.

47 Which person joined a group only because someone kept insisting? ☐

48 Which person admits they failed to consider the social consequences of moving? ☐

49 Which person felt embarrassed about being unable to manage everyday tasks? ☐

50 Which person has turned down an opportunity to return to where they came from? ☐

51 Which person found the loss of their professional status hard to bear? ☐

52 Which person mentions a partner who adapted more quickly than they did? ☐

53 Which person feels increasingly detached from their place of origin? ☐

54 Which person advises others to set money aside for visiting old friends? ☐

55 Which person found that a benefit they had been promised was not what it seemed? ☐

56 Which person has stayed much longer than they originally intended? ☐

PAPER 2

Writing

1 hour 30 minutes

Part 1 · Essay

You must answer this question. Write your answer in 220–260 words in an appropriate style.

1 ESSAY · 220–260 WORDS

> Your class has attended a panel discussion on the best ways for schools to prepare students for working life. You have made the notes below:
> Ways schools could prepare students for working life: • work experience placements • careers advice • lessons in practical skills
> Some opinions expressed in the discussion: “A week in a real office teaches you more than a term of lessons.” “Most teenagers have no idea what jobs actually exist.” “Schools should teach us how to pay tax, not just algebra.”
> Write an essay for your tutor discussing two of the ways in your notes. You should explain which way would be more effective in preparing students for working life, giving reasons in support of your answer.
> You may, if you wish, make use of the opinions expressed in the discussion, but you should use your own words as far as possible.

Part 2 · Choice of task

Write an answer to ONE of the questions 2–4 in this part. Write your answer in 220–260 words in an appropriate style.

Answer ONE of the 3 tasks.

2 REPORT · 220–260 WORDS

> The principal of your college is concerned about how students travel to the college every day and has asked you to write a report.
> Your report should describe how students currently travel to the college, identify any problems with their journeys, and recommend changes that would make travelling to the college easier and more environmentally friendly.
> Write your report.

3 LETTER · 220–260 WORDS

> You have read the following announcement in your local English-language newspaper:
> “The council has announced plans to close Riverside Park and sell the land for housing. We would like to hear our readers’ views before the final decision is made next month.”
> Write a letter to the editor giving your opinion on the plans, explaining why the park matters to local people, and suggesting what should happen instead.
> Write your letter.

4 REVIEW · 220–260 WORDS

> You see this announcement on an English-language website for language learners:
> “Have you used an app to learn a language? We want honest reviews! Tell us what the app offers, what worked for you and what didn’t, and say who you think would benefit most from using it.”
> Write your review.

PAPER 3

Listening

approximately 40 minutes · 30 questions

Your teacher will play the recordings. Each recording is played twice.

Part 1 · Multiple choice (extracts)

You will hear three different extracts. For questions 1–6, choose the answer (A, B or C) which fits best according to what you hear. There are two questions for each extract. You hear each extract twice.

Extract One

You hear two friends talking about a cookery course they attended.

Extract Two

You hear part of a radio interview with a woman who runs a small bookshop.

Extract Three

You hear two colleagues discussing a training day at work.

1 What did the man find most useful about the course?

A the chance to cook unfamiliar dishes
B the feedback from the instructor
C the techniques he was shown

2 How does the woman feel about the course now?

A disappointed by how little she remembers
B surprised that it has changed her habits
C annoyed that it was so expensive

3 What does the bookshop owner say about her customers?

A They are more loyal than she expected.
B They mostly come for recommendations.
C They buy fewer books than before.

4 What is her attitude to the big online retailers now?

A She refuses to compete with them on price.
B She believes they have made people read less.
C She thinks they have unintentionally helped her.

5 The two colleagues agree that the training day

A was poorly organised.
B dealt with the wrong topics.
C went on for too long.

6 What does the man intend to do?

A complain to the organisers

B suggest changes for next time

C avoid future training days

Part 2 · Sentence completion

You will hear a student called Mia Carter talking about a summer she spent working at a wildlife rescue centre. For questions 7–14, complete the sentences with a word or short phrase. You hear the recording twice.

7 Mia first heard about the rescue centre from her _____ .

8 The animal that Mia found most frightening was a _____ .

9 According to the staff, the most important quality for the work is _____ .

10 Mia's working day began at _____ in the morning.

11 Mia was shocked to learn that most of the animals had been injured by _____ .

12 The task Mia found hardest was writing _____ for the vet.

13 Mia says the centre's biggest problem is a lack of _____ .

14 Next year Mia hopes to work at a centre in _____ .

Part 3 · Multiple choice (interview)

You will hear part of an interview with two people, Grace Mallory and Sam Okafor, who left their careers to open a small music school. For questions 15–20, choose the answer (A, B, C or D) which fits best according to what you hear. You hear the recording twice.

15 Grace says she left her job as an accountant because

A she had always wanted to teach.

B a health problem forced her to stop.

C she felt her work had no real value.

D she received an offer she could not refuse.

16 According to Sam, the most difficult aspect of the first year was

A losing more money than expected.

B the amount of paperwork involved.

C finding suitable premises.

D disagreements about how to run the school.

17 What do Grace and Sam both say about teaching adults?

A They find it more rewarding than teaching children.

B Adults are too hard on themselves.

C Adults need more patience than children.

D Adults are harder to motivate.

18 What is Grace's view of music exams?

A The school refuses to enter students for them.
B They suit some students but harm others.
C Parents value them more than they should.
D They are becoming less relevant every year.

19 What does Sam regret about the way they started?

A charging too little for lessons
B not employing other teachers sooner
C leaving his previous career too suddenly
D taking on too many students

20 Grace and Sam agree that the main thing the school has given them is

A more control over their time.
B a renewed enthusiasm for playing their instruments.
C a sense of belonging in the town.
D a stronger partnership with each other.

Part 4 · Multiple matching

You will hear five short extracts in which people are talking about a hobby they gave up. While you listen you must complete both tasks. TASK ONE: for questions 21–25, choose from the list (A–H) the reason each speaker gives for giving up the hobby. TASK TWO: for questions 26–30, choose from the list (A–H) how each speaker feels about it now. You hear the recording twice.

TASK ONE · THE REASON EACH SPEAKER GIVES FOR GIVING UP THE HOBBY

A an injury
B the cost
C a change in family circumstances
D pressure from other people
E the hobby becoming competitive
F moving to another area
G an unpleasant experience with a teacher
H no longer finding it a challenge

TASK TWO · HOW EACH SPEAKER FEELS ABOUT IT NOW

A relieved to have stopped
B determined to take it up again
C sad about the friendships that were lost
D grateful for what it taught them
E guilty about the money spent
F surprised at how little they miss it
G nostalgic but with no wish to return
H embarrassed about how seriously they took it

PAPER 4

Speaking

15 minutes

Interlocutor's script and candidate prompts. The Speaking test is taken in pairs with two examiners; this booklet lets you practise with a partner or a teacher.

Part 1 · Interview

The examiner asks you questions about yourself. Answer in full sentences and give reasons: two or three sentences per question is about right. About 2 minutes.

1 Interlocutor: Good afternoon. My name is Daniel and this is my colleague, Priya. And your names are? … Thank you. First, we'd like to know something about you.

- Do you live in a house or a flat? What is it like?
- What kind of music do you enjoy listening to? Why?
- How important is it for you to spend time outdoors?
- Tell us about a place you would like to visit one day.
- Do you prefer studying or working on your own or with other people? Why?
- What is the most interesting thing you have done recently?

Time: 2 min.

Part 2 · Long turn

You get three pictures and talk about two of them on your own for about a minute, answering the two questions written above the pictures. Then your partner answers a short question about your pictures (about 30 seconds). About 4 minutes in total.

1 People using technology outdoors

Interlocutor: In this part of the test, I'm going to give each of you three pictures. I'd like you to talk about two of them on your own for about a minute, and also to answer a question briefly about your partner's pictures. Here are your pictures. They show people using technology outdoors. I'd like you to compare two of the pictures, and say why the people might be using technology in these situations, and how useful it might be to them.

- Why might the people be using technology in these situations?
- How useful might it be to them?

A A woman jogging along a riverside path at dawn, glancing at a smartwatch on her wrist. She has headphones in, and a stone bridge is just behind her.

B A group of teenagers in a park, crowded around one phone held up on a stick, filming themselves dancing. An elderly man on a nearby bench is watching them over his newspaper.

C A farmer standing in a muddy field in the rain, holding a controller and looking up at a drone. A flock of sheep is scattered across the hillside in the distance.

Time: 1 min.

2 People celebrating something

Interlocutor: Now, here are your pictures. They show people celebrating something. I'd like you to compare two of the pictures, and say what the people might be celebrating, and how memorable these celebrations might be for the people involved.

- What might the people be celebrating?
- How memorable might these celebrations be for the people involved?

A A family around a kitchen table with a homemade, slightly lopsided cake. A small boy is blowing out the candles while his grandmother films him on a tablet and a dog waits hopefully under the table.

B A crowd of football fans in a town square at night, wearing scarves and waving flags, some of them climbing onto a fountain. A police officer stands to one side with her arms folded.

C Two colleagues in an office corridor. One is holding up a framed certificate while the other shakes her hand; a single balloon is tied to a chair and there is a half-eaten tray of biscuits on a desk.

Time: 1 min.

Part 3 · Collaborative task

You and your partner discuss the question on the sheet, using the ideas around it, for about 2 minutes. Then you have about a minute to reach a decision together. You get 15 seconds to read the sheet first.

1 Interlocutor: Now, I'd like you to talk about something together for about two minutes. Here are some things that influence what people decide to buy and a question for you to discuss. First you have some time to look at the task. … Now, talk to each other about how important these things are when people decide what to buy.

- Now you have about a minute to decide which of these has the strongest influence on young people.

How important are these things when people decide what to buy?

price | the opinions of friends | advertising | the reputation of the brand | concern for the environment

Time: 15 seconds to read, then 2 min.

Part 4 · Discussion

The examiner asks you and your partner questions related to the topic of Part 3. Give opinions with reasons and react to what your partner says. About 5 minutes.

1 Interlocutor: Use the following questions, in order, as appropriate: … What do you think? … Do you agree? … And you?

- Some people say that advertising should not be allowed on social media. What do you think?
- Do you think people buy more things than they need? Why?
- How much does the pressure to own the latest products affect young people?
- Is it better to spend money on experiences or on possessions?
- Some people say that shopping has become a leisure activity rather than a necessity. Do you agree?
- Should schools teach young people how to manage money? Why / why not?
